Grenze/n (Border/s)

Open, single-stage project competition held by the Institute for Art in Public Space Styria in cooperation with ORF Steiermark for an artistic short film

THEME:

The Treaty of Saint-Germain that defined the borders in the wake of the First World War was signed one hundred years ago, on 10 September 1919. The break-up or “implosion” (Helmut Konrad) of the Habsburg monarchy was followed by the drawing of new borders. Painful shifts in the population in terms of territory, family, society, language and culture on either side of the border, changes in living conditions, structures and identities are consequences that remain visible to this day.

Not only in this context is the problem of Border/s as a political-territorial, social, language-related and intellectual (“borders in people’s minds”) phenomenon and our understanding of it a major global issue in our society that we must never cease to confront.

In a world in which nation-states are increasingly setting themselves apart, preferring restrictive ideas of right and “us first” to a community of difference for political and economic reasons and favouring simple solutions, attempts are being made to convince an insecure population with a diminishing awareness of history of the necessity of visible demarcations.

Negating postcolonial consequences and operating across continents, hypercapitalist, exploitative corporations are increasingly disregarding social aspects, human rights, and responsibility. As society drifts further and further apart, biological, climate-related and other parameters impacting on the environment are ignored in a short-sighted attempt to get the best out of it for oneself. This myopic stance is manifested in daily demands for visible borders, fences and walls that appear not only absurd, but indeed cynical in a globalised world.

Fundamental questions we must ask include “What are borders?”, “How do they come about, who makes them, territorially, culturally or in our minds?”, “Do we need borders?”, “What for?” and “How do we deal with them?”.

Marking the one hundredth anniversary of the drawing of the border in Styria and the current international relevance of the topic Border/s, the Institute for Art in Public Space Styria is holding a short film competition in cooperation with ORF Steiermark.

The film entries are intended to refer to the nature, purpose, history and current relevance of the topic of Border/s and to convince the TV audience.

Conscious of the fact that border is a construct that requires constant scrutiny, one which, on the one hand, appears necessary and, on the other, can be questioned, overcome, probed or shifted, the aim of the competition is to raise awareness of the issue and to investigate the real-world and the imaginary phenomenon of borders.
